The trucking industry has the potential to offer drivers a fulfilling career with good pay and benefits. However, the prevalence of sexual assault and sexual harassment is very high, serving as a major obstacle to women's participation and career rise in the industry. There is no place like this in any workplace, including the trucking industry. On April 26, we'll be joining the Department of Transportation, drivers, employers, unions and congressional leaders around the country for a Day of Action to Promote Safety and Prevent Sexual Assault and Sexual Harassment in Trucking.

During Truck Driver Awareness and Prevention Month, we're working with the industry to ensure that drivers have a positive work environment free from sexual violence and sexual harassment by updating regulations, partnerships and outreach, including:

- Publishing, within 60 days, draft of revised or other guidance within 90 days, with a minimum 60-day comment period for policies and procedures for sexual assault and violence
- Publishing updated guidance on how to combat sexual harassment in the trucking industry

- Organising or providing comprehensive sexual harassment training on all staff on a regular basis, including board members, management, tourism resources, drivers, operators, drivers, dispatchers and translators. Such training should be tailored specifically to the tourism industry. Through such a health and safety system, training should also extend to managers of tour operators, including sexual harassment training in the industry and the associated tourism practices.
- Ensuring there are appropriate and timely and remedial measures to prevent, respond to, and end all the harassment before they get to the public.
- Educating staff on how they can report and investigate such perpetrator accounts, which should include the use of leadership and staff reporting channels and a clear plan and guidelines in investigating and reviewing cases first. It must be possible to have realistic and realistic for survivors.
- Publicly acknowledging the harmful impact of sexual assault, violence and harassment on individuals in the industry and the public when beginning a dialogue on addressing sexual violence in the tourism sector in a positive, safe and supportive environment.

The State of Maine is working to establish a temporary safety belt law for drivers using the existing statutory. The Department of Transportation is highlighting statewide and countywide restrictions for people using seat belt enforcement and safety belt funding contributions in its Maine Driver Training Program (MDTP). All the Department of Labor, and the State Agency of Transportation, have been supportive, including working for an easy by-passing, allowing restrictions with no use of the veto power. The legislature:
